

Young Charles brought the Banner of Peace in his arms,
His sight caus'd a whole Army to lay down their Arms.
He brought joy and freedom to each true Cavalier,
Brought that 1th front which had long been 1th rear
This Nation distracted again he did cure,
The Laws bravely acted and rul'd by his power,
His griefs was our trouble though we durst not complain;
But our joys they did double when Charles came again.

For raising of wrongs he a David might be,
For meekness a Moses at all times was he,
Like Job for his Patience was he all along;
For Wit and for Wisdom a King Solomon;
But he's gone to Heaven, with Saints for to Reign,
and there to be Crown'd with a new Diadem,
His obliging Presence I cannot forget.
There's thousands in the Nation that mourn for him yet.

And now James the second Rule thou in his place,
Since thou art to the Crown and the Kingdom a grace;
Thou art one of the Line and I greatly conceit,
Thou wilt never decline nor degenerate:
Thou art garnish'd with faculties fit for a Prince;
With wit, learning, valour, the same to advance;
God blest thee from foes, and increaseth thee in wealth;
And let angels attend and bless thee in health.

Now lets our allegiance show to James our King;
Then we shall have friendship and favour from him,
When the Head and the Body unites it is brave,
I hope that great mercy amongst us wee'l have:
I hope that brave England will flourish again,
For the King has granted Liberty our peace to maintain;
and we will serve him as long as we can,
To wait on our Prince wee'l be free e'ry man.

But when Subjects like Absalom would be in Rule,
And are so audacious their King to controul;
Divisions break Unity, and spoyle it quite,
A Kingdom that's divided to stand is not like:
Then let e'ry man be content with his place,
For that's the best way for a man to keep safe,
But when Servants turn Masters, I like no such thing
We should soon have no Subjects, but all would be King.

P I N I S.

Printed for P. Brokely, at the Golden-Ball in Pye-Corner.